HOW TO USE THIS JOURNAL

This is your journal. Nothing in it is a test, and there is no wrong way to use it. Some pages will hit exactly right on a hard day. Others will feel like nothing. That is normal. Move on.

There are five sections inside. Grounding tools you can use in the moment, when your body is in the middle of it. Prompts to help you get the loud thoughts out of your head and onto paper, where they get a little smaller. Trackers to help you notice patterns — what triggers your anxiety, what actually helps, how sleep and mood connect. A toolkit of small practices for the hard days. And eight weeks of short reflections at the end.

You do not have to go in order. If a prompt feels wrong today, turn to another one. If a tracker doesn't fit your week, skip it. Progress is not linear, and neither is this book.

A few small suggestions:

- If your mind is loud, start with a grounding tool from Section One. Sometimes your body has to steady before your thoughts will.

- Try one prompt a day for a week, then look back. You'll see patterns you couldn't see in the moment.

- Try one tracker for a full week before deciding whether it helps. Patterns take time to show up on the page.

- Write in pencil, pen, marker, whatever. Scribble. Doodle in the margins. Leave a page half-empty. This journal will not grade you.

- If you fill a page and want more room, use one of the notes pages at the back. They're there on purpose.

One important thing: this journal is for reflection, not treatment. If your anxiety is getting in the way of school, sleep, eating, friendships, or feeling safe — please also talk to a trusted adult, a school counselor, or a mental-health professional. There are resources at the back of the book. You do not have to do this alone.

Body scan

Anxiety lives in the body — tight jaw, clenched shoulders, shallow breath. A slow scan helps you locate where you're holding it, so you can start to let it go. There is no wrong way to do this.

1. Start at the top of your head. Notice how it feels.
2. Move down slowly: forehead, jaw, neck, shoulders.
3. Continue down: chest, belly, arms, hands, hips.
4. Keep going: legs, knees, ankles, feet.
5. Where do you feel tight? Let it soften if it wants to. If it doesn't, that's okay too.

— WHAT DID YOU NOTICE?

NOTES

Cold water reset

A temperature shift is one of the fastest ways to interrupt an anxiety spiral. Cold on the face triggers the mammalian dive reflex, which slows your heart rate on purpose. Sounds strange. Works fast.

1. Go to a sink, or grab an ice cube or a cold drink.
2. Splash cold water on your face for 30 seconds — especially your forehead and cheeks.
3. Or: hold an ice cube in your palm until it starts to melt.
4. Or: run cold water over your wrists for 30 seconds.
5. Breathe slowly while you do it. Notice the shift.

Prompts

NO. 01

What thought have you been on a loop with today? Write it out until it runs out.

NO. 03

Which of your worries have you already thought about more than once this week?

NO. 04

What is a decision you've been re-deciding? What would 'good enough' look like?

NO. 05

Write down the worst-case scenario in full. Now write how you'd actually handle it.

NO. 06

What are you overthinking because you care? What are you overthinking out of fear?

NO. 07

Finish this: 'I keep thinking about it because...'

NO. 08

Which of your worries are you actually solving, and which are you just circling?

NO. 09

Write down every 'what if.' Then, next to each, write 'and then what?'

NO. 10

What conversation are you rehearsing in your head? Write the version you'd actually say.

NO. 11

What is one thing you cannot know right now, no matter how long you think about it?

NO. 12

What would it feel like to be done thinking about this for tonight?

NO. 13

Whose voice is loudest in your head when you spiral? Is it yours?

NO. 14

What's the story your brain keeps telling? What's a truer, kinder version?

NO. 15

What is a small action that would move this forward more than more thinking?

No

Write the message you want to send, but don't send it. What did you learn?

NO. 17

Where do you feel the overthinking in your body? What do you notice?

NO. 18

What is the thing you're afraid to decide? Set a deadline for the decision.

NO. 19

What would you tell a friend who was thinking about this as hard as you are?

No

14

NO. 21

What is one worry you can hand off — to tomorrow, to a friend, to no one at all?

NO. 22

Write down three worries. Rate each 1-10 for 'how likely is this, really?'

NO. 23

What would you do next if you trusted yourself to figure it out along the way?

NO. 24

What is a decision past-you made that turned out fine? How did that feel then?

NO. 25

What if the thing you're worried about isn't actually the point?

NO. 26

What is the smallest thing you could do right now to interrupt the loop?

NO. 27

What thought are you ready to be done with, at least for tonight?

NO. 28

Write about a time your overthinking was wrong. What actually happened?

NO. 29

Finish this: 'The version of me that isn't overthinking would...'

NO. 30

What does 'done thinking about it' look like tonight? Write yourself permission.

Your Toolkit

PRACTICE

Close the tabs

List every open worry in your head like browser tabs. Star the ones worth keeping open. Close the rest by writing 'not today' next to them.

— TRY IT NOW.

PRACTICE

The 10-10-10

Ask: Will this matter in 10 minutes? In 10 months? In 10 years? Write your honest answer to each. Notice how the size of the worry shifts.

— TRY IT NOW.

PRACTICE

Worry window

Give yourself a 15-minute worry window. Set a timer. Write down everything your brain wants to worry about. When the timer ends, close the book.

— TRY IT NOW.

Name the loop

is this a fact, a fear, or a story?

— TRY IT NOW.

PRACTICE

The next tiny step

You do not need the whole plan. Write the single smallest next action. Do that. Come back to this page after.

— TRY IT NOW.

Reframe it

Write the anxious thought at the top. Underneath, write what you would tell a friend who said this to you. Notice the tone difference.

— TRY IT NOW.

PRACTICE

Park it for tonight

Write your worry on a page. Close the book. Tell yourself: 'It will still be here in the morning if I need it.' Try to leave it here.

— TRY IT NOW.

What I can control

D

PRACTICE

The 5-minute rule

Pick the thing you've been avoiding by overthinking it. Set a timer for 5 minutes and start. Then stop. Write about what came up.

— TRY IT NOW.

Body first

Overthinking is often a signal that your body needs something. Drink water, eat, move for five minutes, or step outside. Then check in.

— TRY IT NOW.

AFFIRMATIONS

Write down phrases that feel true (or that you want to be true). Circle the ones that help most. Come back to them.

- I do not have to solve every thought.
- Not deciding is also a decision I can rest in.
- One clear next step is enough.
- My worry is not my future.
- I can put this down for tonight.
- I trust myself to figure it out as it comes.
- Overthinking is not the same as caring.
- I am allowed to close the tabs.
